JOHN W. WHITE

By Sidney M. Logan

Kalispell mourns the death of a faithful public servant. It lays the fragrant flowers of love and memory on his bier and breathes an earnest benediction on the passing spirit. The children to whom he gave, in loyal service, the best years of his life, under the tribute of their tears, sweetly innocent of race consciousness or distinction. Two generations of the children of Kalispell have seen him go about the work which came to his hands. They have seen those hands grow gnarled and his form become bent with weight of years and hard labor in their service.

Like the teachers in the school in which, in a humble capacity, he was employed, he gave something of his life and vitality to their well being; and it is well that in the years to come they will cherish the memory of this humble servant of an institution that first took up the task of instructing their young minds and developing their characters.

Hand in hand with the family, the school is the bulwark of society, the republic's final citadel of power, the rallying point of loyalty and patriotism.

All who share its responsibilities and participate in the execution of its purposes, in whatever capacity, are entitled to the highest honors.

There was about John White a dignity that commanded the respect of everyone. Unobtrusively but loyally, perseveringly and industriously, he went about his work during the 33 years he lived in Kalispell as an employee of the school board. He asked no favors or advantage except the right to labor. He intruded nowhere. His intimates were few, his friends legion. He had his own race pride, as genuine as that of the purest Caucasian. He reared his family with the tenderest care and transmitted to them much of his own fine character. He held himself aloof in a dignified manner. He sought no social contacts but he was always ready to meet friendship with friendship, courtesy with courtesy, dignity with dignity. He played the game; he fought the battle of life according to the rules, he struck no foul blow; he caused no one a moment's sorrow or pain. He contributed much to the health and happiness and well being of our city's beloved children. The great Referee of all battles and struggles may very justly hold up the right hand of John White in token of victory.

PEARL HAZE WHITE

(By Sidney M. Logan)

Pearle Haze White, of Scotch-Irish descent, was born September 7, 1876 at Breckenridge, Missouri, where he spent his boyhood days under the guardianship of his grandparents.

As a young man, he came west, locating in Spokane, Washington. He had resided near Kallispell since 1911 and during that period was engaged in the dairy business. He died on November 9, 1934 from accidental causes. Surviving him are his widow, Mada White, and daughters, Mrs. Ruth Crane of Jerome, Idaho, Dorothy White of Bremerton, Washington, Mrs. Alice McLaughlin and Nellie White of Kallispell.

Fifty years or more ago, a distinguished British traveler and author wrote his impressions of America. Concerning our diplomacy and pretensions generally he was caustic in the extreme. He took time out, however, to pay tribute to an American painter and an American author. To Claude's "Twilight in the Wilderness" hanging in the Alhambra, and to the words of "Home, Sweet Home" he paid a glowing and fervent tribute, acknowledging a world's indebtedness for America's contribution to poetry and art. It is these soft colors and sweet undertones that make up the sum of "American life." The log cabin is still the expressive symbol of our hopes, aspirations and traditions. More beautiful to us than the Ta Mahal or the capitols of all Europe. It is not the strong, the ambitions and the successful that give the real color to American community life. It is rather the plodding, every-day neighbor who makes our communities what they are; men who faithfully and earnestly carry on day by day in their own humble calling; meeting neighbors with a friendly smile, a hearty handclasp and a word of encouragement; who can see the sunshine when there is no sun; who gives the best he has and looks for the best—not the worst —in his friends and neighbors. These constitute the real backbone of American citizenship. These are the ones who lend cheer and happiness to community life. Of this group, the subject of this sketch was a charter member. Poor to the point of poverty, in the world's goods, he was endowed beyond measure with the richness of a happy, friendly, cheerful nature. As he made the rounds of Kallispell day after day, his greetings brought sunshine and warmth to the hearts of his friends. No matter what spectre of want or misfortune might accompany him in his rounds. Of trouble and misfortune he had a plenty, but with these he never burdened or troubled his friends. He faced life unafraid. He gave to others and to the world the best that was in him. The bravest of the brave could do no more. The proudest of the world's royalty or nobility could not set a finer example of real dignity or superiority to adversity than did this humble neighbor of ours as went about the Neighbor's work.
