Whitefish Man Killed In Fall Into Crevasse

WEST GLACIER — A Big Mountain ski instructor was killed Sunday after plunging into a 40-foot crevasse while skiing on Sperry Glacier in Glacier National Park.

Ron Matthews, 32, Whitefish, died a short time after falling into the four-foot wide chasm about noon. A doctor in a rescue team said death resulted from extensive head injuries.

The body was recovered about 6 p.m. Sunday and taken by helicopter to West Glacier, then to Austin Funeral Home in Whitefish.

Chief Ranger Reuben Hart said Matthews, his wife Andrea and their daughter Sarah, 4, had hiked from Lake McDonald to Sperry Chalet late Saturday and stayed there overnight.

The recovery operation required lowering a rescue team with a litter by ropes to the bottom, then hoisting the recovery party to the top of the ice rim.

Matthews was a former Flathead Valley Community College art instructor.

Mr. Matthews was born Jan. 23, 1939, at Chicago, Ill., a son of Kenneth and Gladys Matthews. He had received his early schooling in Chicago and had later attended the University of Montana in Missoula, the Brooklyn Museum of Arts in New York, the University of California at Berkeley, and the Northern Illinois University, having devoted his studies to ceramic and metal sculpture.

Early Sunday morning Matthews and three friends, Gene Evans, Cliff Pearson and Edmund Ray, all of Whitefish, decided to hike from the chalet to the top of the glacier—a distance of nearly four miles—and ski down.

Matthews slipped near the edge of the crevasse and fell in. Ray proceeded to the chalet to summon help while the other two men stayed with Matthews.

A helicopter piloted by Bob Schellinger, who was at Hungry Horse on assignment with the Flathead National Forest, was dispatched to the scene. It was landed precariously on the glacier, the park's largest at nearly 300 acres, while the recovery mission was completed.

Rescuers thought there were signs of life when they reached Matthews but he was dead when his body was removed.

Dr. Wade R. Covill, Columbia Falls, a former paramedic, was one of 11 men ferried to the scene by the helicopter to assist in the rescue. Matthews' death

He had been employed with the trail crew in Glacier National Park for several summers from 1963 to 1965. In 1965, he moved to Whitefish and was employed with the Winter Sports Inc. as a ski instructor for the Carl Hinderman Ski School. This summer he was employed with the Duffy Excavation on the Big Mountain Development. He was to become a ceramic and metal arts instructor for the Rosary College of River Forest, Ill. Aug. 23.

Mr. Matthews was of the Episcopal faith.

Feb. 28, 1967, he was married to Andrea Thoe in Kalispell and is now survived by her at the home on Big Mountain. He is also survived by one daughter, Sarah at home; his mother, Mrs. James (Gladys) Price of Chicago; one brother, Darrell, of Elmhurst, Ill. and one sister, Lois Matthews of Chicago.
