South Fork kayak accident

22 June 1983

By RICK CRONE

Of the Inter Lake staff

A kayak accident on the South Fork of the Flathead River near Spotted Bear claimed the lives of two Kalispell men early Wednesday afternoon.

Flathead County Deputy Coroner Jack LaBonty said Robert Lee Reaser, 45, and John B. Hayes, 45, drowned when the kayak they were steering up the South Fork hit some rocks, capsized and tossed them out.

"There were life jackets all over, but neither one of them had them on," LaBonty said. He said it was apparent from the gear found in the 15-foot kayak that the two men were planning to spend the day on the river fishing.

He said fishing gear, soda pop and sandwiches were found in the craft.

LaBonty said he was not sure whether the two men were headed up- or down-river, but they had vehicles parked both at the mouth of the upper river where it spills into Hungry Horse Reservoir, and at the Bear campground.

The two men apparently put water sometime before noon.

LaBonty said an unidentified couple witnessed the accident. The couple was camped on the west shore of the river and were standing on the bank when they saw the accident.

He said a third person, who also was identified, spotted two bodies in the water downstream from where the accident occurred. That man signaled Forest Service road crews at work on the east shore for help.

The road crews relayed word of the accident by radio to the ranger at Spotted Bear, he said, where the emergency message was passed on to a helicopter. It happened to be dropping off camp on an airstrip near Spotted Bear. Word of the accident finally reached the sheriff's office at 12:40 p.m.
