A MURDER AT WHITEFISH

James Hines Beaten to Death and His Body Placed Under a Train.

James Hines, a section man who had been working at Essex, was murdered in the railroad yards at Whitefish Saturday night or Sunday morning. The body was discovered by a man who was testing the wheels of a freight train. It was lying beside the track, both legs cut off where the wheels of a freight car had passed over them. The car had only been moved a distance of a few feet in switching, and one of the wheels still rested on part of the severed leg.

An examination disclosed that the man's head had been crushed with a stone, which was found near covered with blood. The trail of blood showed that he had been dragged for a short distance after being killed, and thrown partly under the car, with the intention of making it appear that he had fallen under the train.

Hines had come from Essex the day previous and had cashed pay checks amounting to about $75, and it is supposed he had that amount on his person at the time, and that he was killed by men who knew he had the money.

Sheriff O'Connell and Coroner Sherman went to Whitefish and made a thorough investigation; and an inquest was held Tuesday, but nothing that would shed much light on the crime was developed.

Two men, Jas. Kelly and John Roscoe, who had been around with Hines during the day and night preceding the murder, were arrested on suspicion that they were concerned in it. They were brought to Kalispell Wednesday and are held in the county jail.
